

'Managing People'

Tips To Become A Boss That You Wish You Had

“Are you a newly promoted manager?
I am sure that you are excited about your promotion.”

For the first time, you have few people reporting to you. It is a new experience and you want to do your best to be a great manager. But sometimes you also feel a little anxious. For example, you are still not too sure about managing your relationship with John who used to be your co-worker but will report to you now. Then, there is Niel, who has not been performing well for last few months. Should you ask him to leave or are you being unfair? Sometimes, you feel that your team is not moving fast enough. You feel impatient but are afraid to confront them as you still want them to like you. After all, are not great managers supposed to be loved by their people?

If these questions keep you awake in the night, you are not alone. Managing people is a fascinating area and we all struggle and learn with experience. This workshop will kick off your own journey of being a great people manager. These tips are distilled from real life experiences & interviews with hundreds of employees like you.

We will also use this opportunity to start creating your 'Personal Action Plan'. Let your journey start now...
